ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Good friends are the greatest blessing in a writing life, and I have had the best. Will Nguyen, without your sense of humor and cynical goodness, life would be very bleak and very bad. You always help me recognize when I'm not making any sense, and you encourage my growth in every way. Juan Castillo, you shape how I perceive beauty in art and in all places while constantly cracking me up. Melissa Campos, thank you for your preternatural patience. Safiya Sinclair, my love, you're my role model. I thank you so much for your brilliance in each incandescent part of you; for your uplifting confidence in me; for being who I want to be as a woman and a writer. Nicole Richards Diop, thank you for the singular way you choose to be in the world and the exquisiteness you add to it. Reyna Camps, thank you for the many, many joys over half my lifetime; thank you also for the pessimism. Cody Farthing, you're everything at once—thank you for your strength, which you use to pull me out of my obsessive spirals when you can. Shari Sharpe, I cannot ever thank you enough. The most generous person I know, you offer life-giving support and spend boundless time and energy agonizing with me over endless minutiae. You make all things clear and mirrorlike.

I am extremely grateful for the professors who have supported me since I was seventeen. Anne Fadiman taught me that writing must be paired with compassion. Laura Kasischke is so wildly weird in everything she does and brought kind light to my experience of academia. Bill Deresiewicz helps me feel less lost and hopeless while figuring out my path as a young writer.

I extend my deepest gratitude to my academic advisors. David St. John, thank you for helping me stay the course with your guiding wisdom. Bill Handley and David Bridel, thank you both for your kind notes and edits of my project drafts.

I sincerely thank the people who listen to me ramble: Hiba bint Zeinab, for commiserating over a past of religious violence, and Brian Souder, for being a sounding board. Thank you, Tim DeMay, for being my harshest critic.

I have been so lucky in this process to know Dan Halpern, who saw this book before I did. Jin Auh has been my life raft during the long years of this difficult undertaking. Thank you, Jin, for advising me to trust my instincts and for urging me to the seemingly simple but radically unfamiliar task of writing what I want to write. You empowered me to delete this six-word phrase from my vocabulary: “I don’t want to be difficult.” Gabriella Doob and Norma Barksdale, thank you for drawing out ideas and truths I was afraid to put on paper.

I hope to do justice to my immediate family’s unstable and strange experience of this world. Daddy, thank you for countless days spent telling and untangling our family histories. Uwani, you taught me how to read and raised me; I owe you a lifelong debt of gratitude. Ishaya, you made childhood an adventure, and I am so proud of the man you have become. Mommy, you made me dream about writing your life, whose sacrifices I only now begin to understand. You are selfless. You shoulder all of us. I love you so much.
