Acknowledgments

My infant daughter, Thea, for occasionally sleeping through the night and in no way whatsoever complicating the process of finishing a book. My wife, Gillian, for sustaining Thea, our farm, and everything else, and for agreeing to spend most of my advance on saplings. My parents, Richard Andrews and Colleen Chartier, for unfaltering encouragement and many hours spent watering the aforementioned saplings in a pitiless sun. My grandfather Robert Andrews for giving me the revolver. Gillian and Colleen again, specifically for traveling to Bigfork to photograph the process of forging.

Jeffrey Funk for opening the New Agrarian School to me and being immensely generous with time and expertise. Betsey Funk for making me feel at home every time I came to work. Germaine White for excellent black currant jam and conversation. Dan'l Moore for starting my blacksmithing education.

Michael Hicks and Nathaniel Ian Miller for their close reading of drafts and complete unwillingness to please. David James Duncan for being kind enough to place my work in lofty company.

Naomi Gibbs for seeing merit in this project. Ivy Givens for her keen editorial eye and patience while discussing issues large and small. Duvall Osteen for wheeling, dealing, and handing down stylish baby clothes. David Hough for the very best kind of pointy-headed nitpicking. Everyone who contributed to this project at HarperCollins—Laura Brady, Pam Barricklow, Brian Moore, Kerry Rubenstein, Chloe Foster, Tavia Kowalchuk, Taylor Turkington, and Kelly Cronin—for sharing in the mountain of work that stands between a good story and a finished book.
