Acknowledgments

This book only exists because of the support of my wife, Juliana, who first encouraged me to turn my fascination with American conservatives into reporting of my own. She took on far more than her fair share of work to keep our lives running while I was writing this book, and remains the best editor I know. Juliana: I love you so much.

My parents, Peggy and Bill, have given me more support and encouragement than any son could ask for. My wife's parents, Michele and Steve, and her brother, Ben, have been sources of inspiration and help throughout this process.

Covering the right can be lonely work. It was even more so in QAnon's first days, when few people recognized that it was shaping up to be bigger than a few kooks online. My reporting is indebted to the work of other people who covered this beat from the beginning, including Mike Rothschild, Jared Holt, Brandy Zadrozny, Ben Collins, and Paris Martineau. The hosts of the QAnon Anonymous podcast—Travis View, Julian Feeld, and Jake Rockatansky—have also done excellent work on the world of Q.

Cullen Hoback's HBO documentary, Q: Into the Storm, broke new ground on Q's possible identities. The operators of several anonymous Twitter accounts tracking QAnon have also played a key role in expanding our understanding of its consequences, doing crucial work compiling videos and tracking court cases.

My agents, Matt Latimer and Keith Urbahn at Javelin, were the first to recognize the possibilities in a book about QAnon. My editor at HarperCollins, Sarah Haugen, suffered through rounds of edits to improve this book. Rebecca Raskin at HarperCollins and Jordan Mulligan at HarperCollins UK helped bring the book on board.

I've been blessed to have excellent editors at The Daily Beast, including Tracy Connor, Jackie Kucinich, Matt Fuller, Noah Shachtman, and Sam Stein. I have shared bylines with a number of great reporters on this beat, including Asawin Suebsaeng, Zachary Petrizzo, and Kelly Weill. This book never would've happened without my partners in The Daily Beast's Fever Dreams podcast—Asawin, Kelly, and Jesse Cannon—who picked up the slack so I could keep writing.

This book is only possible because of the encouragement from readers and listeners who have supported my reporting: first the subscribers to my newsletter, Right Richter, and then on Fever Dreams. It's been gratifying hearing from many of you, and I'm thankful for your support over the years.

I fell in love with journalism while working on Georgetown's campus newspaper, the Georgetown Voice. I'm lucky enough to still be friends today with many of the people I met there: Chris, Molly, Daniel, Kate, Brendan, Tim, Jeff, Joe, and Henry, all of whom have heard more about QAnon than any reasonable person could ever expect to.

Finally, reporting and writing this book would not be possible without the people whose lives have, one way or another, been torn apart by QAnon. I'm thankful that they trusted me with their stories.
